Instead of that the President held a long consultation with M. Cavaignee and N Poincare. What the result may be is not yet known. A report is even in cliculation that M Faure will follow M. Casimer-Perior's example and resign. It is undoubtedly true, however, that the new President finds the political situation of France much more serious than he imagined when he took office four days age.
There are said to be certain alarming secrets of state which will come to light very soon.

Basa Ball Notes

The assertion oftentimes made that the base hall profession is composed very largely of players of questionable and disreputable bubits is not borne out by the facts Within the past five years there has been a great improvement in this respect The drunkards and "bummers' have been gradually weeded out and a marked improvement been made in the personnel of the profession. The time was when a man a playing skill was about the only basis on which he enald secure an engagement, but now it is not the only thing that fills the bill shho gnol yd To-day not only is the skill that a base ball player possesses taken into consideration in considering his flutess for a position on a team, but also his personal habits, his disposition, his influence among his associates and his reputation in the community, all these are qualities which men must possess in order to get an engagement with any reputable pro fessional club Then, again, two-thirds of the ball players of to-day are men who save a portion of their salaries every year, where five years ago they were spendthrift. President I. B. Issaeson of the Lewiston hase ball association says that the outlook for the game this season is very promising. Contracts have been sent to Mains. Sheehan and Laroous and no doubt they will be signed. Dan Burke who caught for Springfield last year is very desirous of coming to Lew iston and will probably be signed. He is a heavy litter, a good catcher, and will be a valuable addition to the team. Other men will be signed in short order as soon as a manager is decided upon.

Our correspondent writes: The farmer and others are improving the river sled ding to get up their year's wood and other lumber in advance of some of the big storms which we are pretty sure to have in February and March. The shovel handle factory has started and the handles are being hauled in as fast as possible while the roads are good; and a large pile of box lumber has been hauled to Southard's shop, to be made into the several kinds of boxes that may be called for-

The Glenwood Mineral Spring Comsany are shipping a large amount of water from their spring, situated on the farm of J. O. Matthews, Esq., one mile from the village. Its analysis is 95, per out pure, with other medicinal qualities, and is used largely by invalids. Some people usedt for cooking purposes. What is needed to boom and advertise it and for shipping facilities is a hotel and an electric road: from Hartland, three and one-half miles, to the spring, and we hope to have them in the near future. The Company is composed of some of our prominent citizens, who no doubt will make it a success.

[CONTINUID.] They had passed over the line of low hills, rigragging down a sandy draw on the other side, and now the road, mere parallel lines of wheel marks almost overgrown with grass and flowers, lay before them until vaguely lost in the distance. Almost at the horizon a windmill stretched its long arms idly against the sky, and beyond a dotted line ran up and down across the rolling land, the posts of a barbed wire fence. Nothing else broke the surface of the measurcless, gray green expanse, somber as an ocean in eternal calm, but for the flowers which were everywhere—blue upines and the pink and white of astragali, the silken petals of Moxican poppies just bursting into bloom, the pinicand white and yellow of primroses and the red fire of mallows, "The boundary of Cameron's lund," Brown observed, pointing out the line of fence. "He has 30,000 neros here. Outside you will be quite beyond the limits of good society-in other words. upon the public domain, which is wholly unsettled, of course."

"The land belongs to nobody?"

"Only to a paternal government, whose hold upon it is so light that any-body may have it for the asking. If you would like some Wyoming land, Miss Ellory, you will presently be face to ace with a glorious opportunity." "I had fancied that I might take up ome land when I came west," she milingly confessed. "My brother has alson up a good deal." "I suppose so," he answered rather iryly, yet smiling amusedly. "And will you take up a homestead or a des-"Oh, the latter, I think! That gives most acres, does it not? think the government must offer me omething rather more inviting than this. I do not want uite such a desert."

"And what do you propose to do with

"Ah, who knows?" she returned smiling onignatically. "I think I shall simply keep it to enjoy the sensation of "I suppose it has not entered into your alculations that the possession might avolve anything like Pombarras de

"No; I had hardly thought of that," he absently admitted, adding after a moment, 'You have not lived in Wybining all your life, I suppose?"

"I am not quite one of the aborignes," he replied after a perceptible

When a couple of them happen to alight near each other, they will bob their heads back and forth aley will om her heads success and torth like a mockery of hittle old men saying. 'How to do?' Then of a sudden, per-haps, they will seem to trump up same imaginary offense, humping up their shoulders and wriggling their tails, wearing at one another in pantomime. s it were, sharpening their bills on the ground, as though preparing for most sanguinary battle. But it is all a bluff, for after trying to stare one another out countenance for a moment or two it or countenance for a moment or two it always appears that one is afend and the other dares not, and so the affair ends by both flying away in a sort of shamefaced flurry, never lobing back." "[You have been very observing," she enarked, almost with irritation. Why was this man, in whom nature and education appeared to have worked togother in the making of a gentleman, gut off from the world to which it spomed he might legitimately belong merely a breaker of horses on these Wy oming plains? Why, when she had so pointedly given him an opportunity, would be not explain himself? "Some things have been rather forced pon my observation, " he said simply.

I was line tider once for awhile. Ther the stock, the covotes and prairie dogs. rattlesuakes and birds were about all ielsociety I had. Nuturally I came to

"Few of us have the choosing of our lives," he returned in a tone which seemed somehow to discourage questioning or comment as to his own case. 'Fute rather keeps the game in her own hands, you know. And if some of us happen to find ourselves line riders in the course of events, if we are philosophors, we simply grin and bear it."

I should think it would be too much for even a philosopher to grin under such direumstances," she persisted. "Ah, philosophers grin at all things. ow that it looks better than crying, and that nine times out of ten it gots just as far toward relieving the evil," he said, with a grim laugh. They were now well out upon the open plains, the road, crossed and recrossed with the deeply tradden trails of crossed with the deeply trodden trails of cattle, mere wheel marks, at best but little worn from travel, all so uncer-tainly defined that Edith comprehended fully Brown's objection to undertaking the trip by night. sullen faced Taurus moving a little vi ward them, as if with half formulated thoughts of battle, while from a rise ahead, so imperceptible that it seemed that they might almost have risen out of the earth itself, a band of horses presently crossed the way, exquisitely graceful in their lithe, free motions. It reminded Paul Brown to speak of the roundup, and seeing that she boked interested he went on to describe the scone whon thousands of cattle were gathered together upon a plain like that, the wild, frightened creatures cowed to momentary holplessness, but ready to make a mad break for liberty at any moment. He told of the hundreds of riders swiftly circling around the herd upon the wiry little cov ponies, as intelligently trained in the running down of an unruly cow as the riders themselves. He described the routine of the roundup, its hardships and dangers; the extempore circus, with backing horses scarcely more than half broken. which regularly begins the day; the long hours of viding in the fierce sunshine, often where gold could not pur-chase one drep of good water. He teld of the dicariness of the night leading when, worn with the labors of the long, hard day, the rest of the camp all sheep ing, the peor cowboys told off for that duty must ride about the surly herd hone after hour, always singing, partly to keep themselves awake, but more to keep the animals diverted and prevent them from "milling," that crazy whirl-ing round and round which may end in a stampede: going on to paint the hor-rors of that stampedo by night, when the maddened herd must be rounded up and halted, though to venture before those flying hoots might mean no less than death for somebody. He told "of moving accidents by flood and field," eyor encouraged to go on by the girl's rapt attention.

"Ah, it is all so interesting!" she exclaimed, drawing a long breath, when at longth he paused, with a somewhat shamefaced consciousness of unaccus tomed garrulity. "My brother is not a good correspondent. He has told us so little of this western life, of these wild experiences."
"And your brother is a cowman—act a cowboy. There is a vast distinction between the two," he observed, with a smile. "If he attends the roundap, it experiences. " is only for the fun of it." "While you have had the work," he glance undisguisedly questioning. "Yes. I have had the work," smilite and shrugging his broad shoulders as he spoke, 'but then there is some thin about it too. By the way, have you noticed that object ahead?

"A carriage! Do you think—can it be really Hugh?" cagerly peering abend, flushing faintly with a consciousness that in the interest of this man's talk habital characteristic this man's talk she had almost forgotten this possibility of encountering the carriage from the "It is the Ellery outfit," he pro-nonneed, although the carriage was still too far away for its occupants to be rec-ognized. "It is the only four-in-hand in Wyoming, so far as I know." His smile was slightly sardenie. Of this, however, Miss Ellery was unconscious, being wholly absorbed in looking ahead. This transport of Ellers's branches. This turnout of Ellery's, a handsome victoria drawn by four spirited horses, so incongruous in its splendor against the grim background of bare plains, was generally regarded as a fit subject for good humored smiles among his unassuming neighbors.

"I am so glad that you will be spared the rest of the leng drive," Miss Ellery remarked, with a slight accession of dignity, as if with the approach of her she was and to what sphere of life it had pleased heaven to call bor had pleased heaven to call her.

"Are 'you?" he dryly returned.

"Well, perhaps you will excuse no it I say that I am nor, but"—

"You are very kind," she hasfily interrupted, "but I am sure that I have given you trouble enough. Ah, it is "—in an eestatic tone, excitedly fluttering a handkereliief, radioutly pretty in her delight,—"it is Nelsine and Hagh and the children?"

In a moment more the sisters in law were classed in tumultuous embrace, pouring out incoherent exclamations of joy between even more confused efforts at mutual explanation. High Ellery, a broad shouldered, blond whiskered, sanburned and bandsome fellow of 30 whose own greeting had been cut short by the irrepressible enthusiasm of his wife, sat smiling sympathetically at their rapture, while Brown waited rasher awkwardly in the read, uncertain what to do.

"Oh, the baggage!" exclaimed Ellery, comprehending the dilemma.
"There is a team a little behind, coming for that, so just throw the small ing for that, so just throw the small traps in there and drive on a bit with the rest, won't yen, like a good fethov?"

"To think of our not getting your telegram until last night?" cried Mrs. Ellery between two kisses. She was a tall, strikingly graceful woman of the brunette type, sparkling with life, her black eyes flashing with a sort of mag-netic fire that held all gluness captive. One quickly understood, watching her precly, humming bird sort of restless-noss, how it was that her hashand's oyes were always turning toward her with a kind of doglike devotion in their miles away, and it was 10 o'clock when we reached home. Ah, I was parfectly frantic when we found your telegram there waiting for us. I wanted to start right off, but it was so dark, and flugh was persuaded that you would know how to take care of yourself perfectly well. He says you always do."

"He is very kind, but I might have found it rather difficult last night but for Mr. Brown," Edith hastily interpolated, with a smile of sweet friendli-ness, at the young man. Now that all her anxioties were at, an end she was in her inixiones were at an each she was in a radiant good humon. "If he had not happened to be at the station"—. "And so you went on to Cameron's and were there all the while. How perfectly lovely!" cried Mrs. Ellery rapturously. "Oh, we were sure that you would manage that right."

of course I am very glad," he said, smiling back at her gratefully over his work of stowing her small baggage in the front of the carriage, where it considerably threatened the legs of the two small boys, who sat looking on in shy 'Ab, the poor children will be crush Ah, the poor children will be crushed under my things! Come here, you dullings. I want you lioth on my lep.
And shall I offer to pay him for the team and for his trouble. Welshel!"
she whispered hurriedly behind a small boy's thoch. "He has been so kind."
Not for the world!" returned the other energediants. "He would take it as in hispit. I was so fortunate in.

Miss Ellory that you happened to be there," she went on turning to the young man with that radiant smile which, to most men, had been a reward which, to most men, had been a reward sufficient for any service. "And we are so much obliged to you and to every body at Cameron's. I wish we could have been sure that she was in such good hands."

but"--"You might come for a month now it you can give us no longer and ther come for mother in the fall," preed El lery rather anxiously. Well, perhaps if that will do," ho hositantly agreed, with a half glance at the back seat of the carriage as he turned back toward his own team. " have my own thorse at Cameron's and will ride over in the course of a week or so if I can arrange it to come. Other wise I will drop you a line."

The ladies were paying no beed to anything besides their own absorbing conversation, but aroused by seeing him-noving to go Edith started forward impulsively. "Oh, Mr. Hrown, are you going? You caust left ne thank you again," peremptorily holding out a small, gloved and. The man had been really kind and now that she might. really kind, and now that she might never lay eyes on him again, for she had not heard a word of the arrangement her brother had been radking she felt that she could well afford to be gracious "I approciate all your kindnesses much Goodby, ".

"Ah, Netsue, your tringination, if devoted to sensational literature, would make your fortune," discreted her higs band indulgently. "As for pour Brown, though, give the devil his due and stiel to what you know about is m."

"But he does not seen quite like a common cowboy, realle," put in Edith interestedly. "Whates you know about "Simply that he is Brown of Lost A.H. 1994, of said Court.

The wagon from the ranch had just come up, and Paul Brown, with the driver of the team, was engaged in transferring Miss Ellery's tronk from the back of the backboard. The work kept him silent for a moment, but he turned around with a gay, infectious laugh which showed all his firm, white tooth. "Hospitality, like virtue, is its own roward sometimes, Mrs. Ellery," he said. "Angols' visits are few and far botwoen at Cameron's. When they do some, we consider that the lunk is all so our side."

"What a charming remark! Miss Ellery must thank you again," cried Mrs. Ellery pleasantly, at once, however, proceeding to engross her guest's attention with a vivarious flow of questioning and talk which left no thought to spare for the young fellow still standing him as he moved to go.
